

Separation Plan — Trioangle / InnBlockchain

Objective: exit Trioangle including my shareholding, take InnBlockchain outright, and stop being in partnership with Bowshul.

This document plans an exit, not a repair. No governance fixes, no shareholders' agreements, no "how to work together better." Every fallback here is also an exit.

Companion files: bowshul-issues-log — what happened. group-financials

(`.raw/Common/Finance/group-financials.md`) — read first for anything involving money; where files disagree, the financials win.

Handling: RAW ONLY. Equity, family employment, liability and records exposure. Never mirror to wiki/ , never on anything shared or synced.

ON HOLD

group-financials §1c records a parallel-records position ("internal book / actual book") affecting both companies and both directors. That goes to independent counsel before anything is said to Bowshul. The separation is step 4 of 4.

1. THE CONVERSATION

The line — never vary it

"This isn't something I've been planning. It's something I've been carrying for years without saying anything, and I've got to the point where I can't carry it any more. So I've decided I want to separate the companies. It isn't about any one thing, and I'm not going to sit here listing things —

I don't want to be in a partnership any more. I'd like us to do it properly."

Why it holds: it states a decision, not an argument, so there is nothing to rebut and no counter-offer exists. Money, support, autonomy, investment — none of them answers "I don't want a partnership." And "I'm not going to sit here listing things" closes the grievance door from my side before he can open it.

Say "carrying", never "suffering". Suffering invites "suffering from what?" and then I am listing things.

The second line — when that isn't enough

"I've got to a point where I don't want my work assessed by a partner at all. Not by you — by anyone. I want to answer for it myself."

The strongest sentence available. Any 50% owner necessarily has a view on what the other does with the company's money and time — even a supportive one. Support is still assessment. He cannot stop being an assessor while remaining a co-owner, so there is no counter-offer in existence. It carries the real grievance — that my work was questioned — with no accusation in it.

The four words that make it work: "Not by you — by anyone." Without them it is an accusation. Never drop them.

"Why? What happened? It worked before — why suddenly?"

He will not leave the table without a reason. Refusing to give one reads as concealment and makes him push harder.

"It isn't sudden. It's been building for ten years, and I never once raised any of it — that part is on me. And I've probably done things that hurt you in those ten years too, and you never raised those either. It worked because we both absorbed it, and I've stopped being able to. There's no single thing you could point at, and nothing either of us does now changes ten years."

Why it is unanswerable: it gives a real reason, names no incident, accepts fault ("that part is on me"), makes it mutual ("I've probably hurt you too" — true; he has his own grievances), and cannot be fixed. Neither of us can undo ten years.

If he asks "like what?" → refuse evenly: "I'm not going to list mine, and I'm not asking you to list yours. We'd both be here all night and neither of us would feel better." Refusing evenly is what makes it fair rather than evasive.

The grammar rule — the whole technique

Every sentence starts with "I". Never with "you".

"You never took responsibility"	"I've been carrying more than I can"
"You didn't follow my decisions"	"I stopped being able to work this way"
"You insulted me"	"Things built up and I said nothing"
"You made it toxic"	"I've changed how I feel about being in a partnership"

Same truth. One version he must fight; the other he cannot argue with.

If he presses harder — two more levels, then stop

Level 2 — "tell me what, and I'll fix it":

"That's exactly the problem. If I'd raised things at the time, maybe you could have. I didn't — for years — so there's nothing sitting there for you to fix now. The window for fixing it closed while I stayed quiet."

He cannot fix what was never raised. Complete reason, fault conceded to me, every offer foreclosed, no incident named.

Level 3 — only if genuinely cornered, once:

"If you want one moment — when you asked me 'what are you doing', something landed. Not because of the question itself. Because of ten years behind it that I'd never said a word about."

That's when I knew I was finished with it."

Then concede his defence before he makes it:

"And I know you asked because salaries hadn't been paid and you were worried. I'm not blaming you for the question. It was the moment I noticed, not the reason."

He cannot argue his way out of something I have already agreed with. The remark was the moment; the ten years was the reason — say it in that order. One example only. Two is a case, and a case invites a defence.

If he offers sacrifices — "I'll change, I'll step back"

The moment I am most likely to fold.

"I believe you'd try, and I'm not doubting you. But this isn't about what you do next. What's changed is in me — I've stopped wanting to be in a partnership at all. That's not something you can fix by doing more."

Then immediately, because this is what lets him accept it:

"And I'm not walking away from you. A full year of handover, same office, whatever you need. I want us to still be friends at the end of this — that's part of why I'd rather not turn it into a list of complaints."

Three things at once: removes the abandonment fear, reframes the absence of a list as kindness rather than evasion, and names the friendship as something I am protecting rather than spending.

The universal deflection

"It's not about that. I don't want to be in partnership any more."

He offers	I say
"We'll share the investment, I support you"	"It's not about the money..."
"You make all the decisions from now on"	"It's not about decisions..."
"I'll take on more responsibility"	"It's not about that..."
"What did I do? Tell me and I'll fix it"	→ Level 2

Same sentence every time. The repetition is the message.

2. THE AGENDA — eight points

No history in points 1–8. Grievances only if he asks for a specific reason, and then only the levels above.

1. The reason — the accumulation line above. Nothing fixable.

2. The proposal

"I think we should separate the two companies. You take Trioangle completely. I take InnBlockchain completely."

3.  What he gets — lead with this, it is what convinces him

- "Trioangle never funds blockchain again. That ends permanently."
- "You run product, strategy and direction your way. No veto from me."
- "No more deadlock. Every decision is yours."
- "You've been saying for years that Trioangle shouldn't be carrying the other things. This is that, finished properly."

⚠ Watch his face on "every decision is yours." If he does not want to run Trioangle alone, that sentence is a threat, not an incentive — and point 3 works against me. Signs: he goes quiet, changes the subject to how much I do, talks about how hard it would be, or pushes on InnBlockchain instead. If so, stop selling point 3 and go straight to the handover offer. See §6.

4. What I'm asking

"InnBlockchain, clean. That's it."

5. The money — three sentences

- "The balances between the companies net off and both are extinguished — nothing follows either of us afterwards."
- "Take the coin and use it to clear the salary, PF, ESI and TDS before we complete. That protects both of us."
- "Any personal guarantee either of us has signed gets released in writing by the bank before completion."

6. QoreUps

"We still both own QoreUps. Let's decide it at the same time — wind it up, or it goes with Trioangle. I don't want us still tied together in a third company afterwards."

7. Timeline

"I'd like us to agree the shape in the next few weeks and complete it properly with advisors after that."

8. If he says no

"Then we need to find another way to do the same thing. You buy my Trioangle shares for cash, or I take advice on what the options are. I'm not asking you to decide today — but I do need this settled one way or another."

Every route offered is an exit. None of them is "let's make it work."

3. HIS OBJECTIONS — and the answer to each

Principle: never argue, never defend. Convert every objection into "on what terms".

A. "You should continue with Trioangle."

"I understand, and I'm not leaving you stranded — I'll do a full year of handover. But the reason isn't Trioangle. It's that neither of us can decide anything, and me staying doesn't change that. I need the ownership separated."

Not a refusal — a request to stay, which means he values what I do. Useful information, and it prices the deal (§6). Answer with the handover, never with an offer to stay.

B. "How will you handle InnBlockchain alone?"

"I already do. Sales, marketing, technical and delivery — all of it, for years. Nothing about that changes. What changes is that I stop splitting my attention three ways."

A fair question and probably a kind one. Separating reduces my load; it does not increase it.

C. "I can't give up my InnBlockchain shares."

Do not accept as final. Find out what it means: "Can you tell me what's behind that? Is it the value, or something else?"

If he means	Answer
"It's worth something and I want that value"	"Then name a number and let's look at it properly with advisors." Good — converts a refusal into a price
"I helped fund it"	"You did, through Trioangle, and that gets settled in the deal. I'm asking for the shareholding, not the history."
"I don't want to look pushed out"	"Then frame it however you like publicly. I care how it's structured, not how it looks."
Refuses, no reason	"Then the other way round — you buy my Trioangle stake for cash, and we get to the same place from the other side."

Never say "you don't deserve it." Entitlement comes from the share register, not from conduct.

D. "Let's close InnBlockchain and focus on Trioangle."

"Closing InnBlockchain doesn't change anything I've asked for. We'd still be partners — just in one company instead of two. The thing I want to change is the partnership, not the number of companies."

It makes no claim about either business, and it shows his proposal solves nothing — he would still be my partner the next day.

If he argues InnBlockchain's prospects, up or down: "Maybe you're right. After this, that's mine to worry about, not yours."

THE PERFORMANCE-NEUTRAL RULE — applies everywhere

Never make InnBlockchain sound valuable. Never make Trioangle sound worthless. Both kill the swap.

If I say	He concludes
"InnBlockchain is doing well"	"Then why would I give you my half?"

If I say	He concludes
"Trioangle is losing money"	"Then why would I take it?"

The reason for separating is the partnership, not the numbers. Any performance argument reopens a valuation fight I do not want.

⚠ If he says "it's okay to lose that money" — the ₹46.7L, or the ₹1.93Cr including QoreUps — do not feel relieved. A man who writes that off rather than let me go is telling me what my presence is worth to him. → §6.

E. "Then let's close Trioangle and focus on InnBlockchain."

"Same answer — that doesn't change anything I've asked for; we'd still be partners. And practically we can't: Trioangle has the clients, the team and the arrears, and closing it makes all of those due at once, on both of us personally."

Partnership answer first, practical second. Leading with the arrears invites a discussion of Trioangle's condition and breaks the performance-neutral rule.

F. "Trioangle has debt. Pay it off first, then you can be released."

Lead with the coin — it settles the whole objection:

"There's ₹88L sitting in the coin. I'm not asking for any of my half of it — you keep all of it. Use it to clear the salary, PF, ESI and TDS, and the debt question is answered without either of us putting in a rupee."

- Resolves his objection using an asset that already exists — he is not asked to find money
- ₹88L against ≈₹48L of arrears leaves him ₹40L. He is better off after it than before
- It reads as a concession from me, so it does not sound like a demand
- And it protects me, which is the real reason I want it. Never say that part

Then, if he separates them	Answer
The ₹18L OD	"Company borrowing, not either of ours personally. It stays with Trioangle. If either of us signed a personal guarantee, the bank should release both of us"

Then, if he separates them	Answer
	in writing as part of completing — that protects you as much as me."
"You still owe the company"	→ the extinguish position, G

G. "InnBlockchain has to repay what Trioangle invested."

"That's what my Trioangle shares are for. I'm handing you 50% of Trioangle and asking nothing for it — and the balances between the companies net off and are extinguished. That's the trade."

It makes the swap a visible exchange, never touches the arithmetic, and is unanswerable as a trade — if he wants the balance repaid and my shares for nothing, he is asking for both sides of the deal. One sentence, then stop.

The ladder, if he pushes. Use in order; stop at the first he accepts.

Rung 1 — the trade, above.

Rung 2 — "There isn't a receivable to settle. It was never structured as one." (group-financials §1: never documented as a loan, undocumented balances unenforceable, no valuer will credit it.)

Accept the cut both ways, openly: the ₹60L "repaid" has no documented basis either, so I cannot claim credit for having serviced it. Extinguishing both sides is the only position that does not require the records to be examined — which is why it suits him too, and I can say so.

Rung 3 — only if he insists on arithmetic:

"Against that balance: ₹31L of my director's salary is still unpaid, and I never drew a rupee as CEO from InnBlockchain or from QoreUps in four years. I'm not asking you for any of it. I'm saying we're square."

Offset	Standing
₹31L unpaid director salary at Trioangle	Documented payable. Unarguable

Offset	Standing
Unpaid CEO salary at InnBlockchain, four years	Fairness point, not a booked liability
Never drew from QoreUps	Fairness point

⚠ The CEO salary is a talking point only. If the accrual was never booked, never create it retrospectively — record integrity is already the central problem here, and a backdated claim is exactly what counsel would stop.

🔴 Three rungs reach zero. There is no version where I pay cash — provided I open at rung 1 and do not argue my way down unprompted.

H. 🔴 "Trioangle put ₹1.46Cr into QoreUps for you. You repay that too."

Do not litigate it. Deflect once and move on:

"QoreUps was a company we both owned half of, and we agreed to start it. Those were company-to-company balances, not money that came to me — I never drew a rupee of salary from QoreUps. It closed on your recommendation and I accepted that. If there's a balance to settle between the companies, the advisors can set it out."

Facts ready, used one at a time only if needed: he approved the formation; he owned 50% of QoreUps so it was his capital in his own company; I took no salary from it; the manager appointed there was approved by him beforehand; the advances were between companies, not to me.

🔴 THE RED LINE. If he asserts I personally owe ₹1.46Cr + ₹46.7L ≈ ₹1.93Cr, that is a legal position, not a negotiating one. Do not concede it, do not argue it, do not accept any figure.

"That's a question for advisors, not for the two of us across a table. Let's not decide it here."

The QoreUps money is also where his own exposure sits (group-financials §1b–1c). Neither of us should improvise about it — which is why counsel comes first.

I. 🗝 The salary facts — a shield, never a sword

Only if he argues I have taken more than I put in. Never introduce them.

"For the record — I've never taken a salary from InnBlockchain or from QoreUps, and I've never taken a CEO salary from Trioangle. I've drawn a director's salary from Trioangle only, the same as yours. And ₹31L of mine is still unpaid."

Then stop. Do not draw the conclusion out loud — let him do the arithmetic. Leading with it restarts the "everyone is also working like you" argument I have never won in five years. Used defensively, once, it is unanswerable.

J. "Why now? What's changed?"

"Nothing in particular happened. Nothing has changed — that's the point. It's been the same for years and I've concluded it isn't going to."

K. "Is this because of me? Are you angry with me?"

"No. This is about how the company is set up, not about you. We've been friends a long time and I'd like that to survive this — which is one reason I'd rather do it cleanly and without a list of complaints."

If he presses further → the accumulation answer, then Level 2.

L. "Let's just carry on as we are."

"That's the one thing I can't do. I've thought about it for a long time and I'm not going to change my mind on it. What's open is how and when we do it — not whether."

M. "Will you compete with us?"

"No. Blockchain is a different business and a different buyer. We should write the boundaries into the agreement both ways, so neither of us has to wonder."

Offer non-compete and non-solicit voluntarily. Costs almost nothing, buys enormous goodwill.

N. "What do we tell the team? And the clients?"

"I'd like us to agree that together and say the same thing. Something simple — we're separating the two businesses so each of us can focus. No detail, no blame, from both of us."

A joint line costs nothing and makes him a participant instead of a target.

O. "What about Gopi? What about your wife?"

"Gopi goes with whichever company needs him — your call on Trioangle's side. On my wife, whatever we agree is fine; I'm not asking for anything special."

Concede both immediately. Neither is worth a unit of negotiating capital.

P. "Give me time to think."

"Of course. Take as long as you need."

● The best realistic outcome of a first conversation. Do not push, do not add, do not fill the silence.

Q. If he becomes angry

"I'm not trying to fight with you. Take time and we'll talk again whenever you want."

Then end the conversation. Nothing decided in anger holds, and one bad hour does not undo the proposal.

R. "Let's bring in family / a common friend."

"I'd rather keep it between us and use advisors for the mechanics. Bringing other people in makes it harder for both of us."

Mediation by mutual friends invites the grievance contest — and Gopi, Kumar and Ajith are the last people to put in the middle.

4. NEVER SAY

Never	Why
"Then what's the purpose of working with you?"	The most hostile sentence available. Contempt, stated plainly. One utterance wastes this entire document
"Toxic" · "you insulted me" · "you don't take responsibility"	True, and in bowshul-issues-log for my clarity. Said aloud they end the friendship and start a grievance contest I lose on the documents

Never	Why
"You questioned my effort / responsibilities / sacrifices"	The one argument he has answered identically four times in five years. He will say "we all work hard" and I have no numbers
"I'll go where I get respect for my work"	Invites "of course I respect you" — an unwinnable feelings argument. Harsher than it sounds: it judges his character
"You never listen to me"	He is a 50% owner. He is not obliged to, and he knows it
"You wanted to close my companies"	He approved both at formation, and on QoreUps he was right
"You're being partial to your own team"	I do the same with marketing. It rebounds
"I work more than you"	Unsettled for five years, never evidenced
"You built Trioangle from the start"	Factually wrong — we built it together — and it concedes authorship, undercutting my 50% and the ₹31L
"I've thought about this for a long time"	Sounds like a planned exit executed beside him. Invites "so you've been deceiving me?" Use "carrying"
"Trioangle isn't short of assets"	True, but it reads as criticism of holding the coin while staff went unpaid. Offer the coin; never point out it should have been used already
The ₹1.46Cr, the funding routing, the records	Nothing about money history until counsel says so
Naming the ₹46.7L or ₹31L as figures	Until counsel confirms how to handle an undocumented balance. " They net off and both are extinguished " is the position
Anything about my wife	Not his business and not a negotiating point
Claiming the coin as a separate concession	It sits inside Trioangle's ≈₹21L net assets. Giving up the shares already gives up my half of it. Double-counting makes everything else I claim look inflated

If he brings up grievances of his own: "That's fair, and I'm not here to argue it. What I'm proposing is..." One sentence, then back to the deal. Do not defend, do not counter, do not score.

5. THE DEAL

Structure — a straight swap

- I give up my 50% of Trioangle
- He gives up his 50% of InnBlockchain
- No cash either way

QoreUps must be decided in the same deal

We each own 50% of a third company — dormant since ~Mar 2026, 2–3 clients on server cost, Gopi part-assigned, and a ₹1.46Cr receivable owed to Trioangle that is almost certainly unrecoverable.

A two-company swap leaves us still jointly owning a third, including its client obligations and filing duties. That defeats the point.

Option	Consequence
Wind it up / strike off	Cleanest. Clients transitioned or given notice. The ₹1.46Cr written off — and that hits Trioangle's balance sheet, i.e. his side after the swap
He takes it with Trioangle	Logical — the receivable is Trioangle's and he wanted it closed. Simplest for me
I take it	No reason to want it; carries the client liability

⚠ The write-off interacts with the valuation. Whoever raises impairment first frames the deal (group-financials §5J). Decide my position before the valuation conversation, not during it.

What actually moves, once, each way

I give up	I receive
My 50% of Trioangle ≈ ₹10.5L (half of ≈₹21L net — already includes my half of the ₹88L coin and the tangibles)	His 50% of InnBlockchain — plausibly ₹8–28L
My ₹31L claim , consumed extinguishing the ₹46.7L	The ₹46.7L balance extinguished

Net: close to even. Discount the ₹21L further — the coin is volatile, 40+ used laptops realise little, revenue is down 43% on a –₹1.5Cr history, and a stake with no board seat trades well below book.

● Two consequences:

1. "No money either way" is genuinely fair — so stop treating it as generosity. It is not a large gift from me, and any claim that it is will not survive his accountant.
2. But nil consideration is still the wrong opening if he needs me (§6). The deal being fair on assets says nothing about what my presence is worth to him — and that is where any consideration would come from.

"No money either way" is four items, not one

#	Item	If left vague
1	Share transfer consideration, nil both ways	Clean. This part works
2	My ₹31L unpaid salary	I lose it. Nobody pays a claim the claimant stopped asking for
3	The ₹46.7L balance	Survives and stays enforceable. He will own 100% of the creditor
4	PF / ESI / TDS arrears, part of ≈₹48L	Follow me personally for my whole tenure. A share transfer does not touch officer liability

The asymmetry: on #2 I must initiate to collect; on #3 he has every incentive to. So "nothing moves between us" resolves as my ₹31L evaporating and his ₹46.7L staying alive.

✅ The clean version: "These balances net off and both are extinguished." Never "let's not worry about money."

● The coin-for-arrears trade

My position: the arrears will not be cleared before I leave; Trioangle keeps them; that is why I give up my share of the ₹88L coin.

Economically fair — ~₹44L of coin value against ≈₹48L of arrears. But it does not do what I think it does:

PF, ESI and TDS are owed to the State, not to Bowshul. No agreement between two shareholders extinguishes them, and officer liability for the period I served does not transfer with the shares.

PF arrears	Personal prosecution exposure under the EPF Act. Under IBC s.36(4) PF/pension/gratuity sit outside the liquidation estate — payable in full, cannot be written down
TDS deducted and not deposited	s.276B — money held in trust. The most dangerous line item available
Unpaid wages	Employees are third-party claimants with their own rights
Who is pursued	The officer in default during the period. That is me, whatever the share register says afterwards

● These are the defaults that cause director disqualification (s.164/167) and fit-and-proper failure — the two things that would block my own company and InnBlockchain's EU authorisation. Leaving them open is the one version of this deal that destroys the business I am separating in order to build.

✓ Same trade, one condition added:

"Take the coin. Use it to clear the salary, PF, ESI and TDS before we complete, and give me the challans. After that it's yours and I'm not asking for anything from it."

Identical economics, and easy for him to accept: ₹88L covers ≈₹48L with ₹40L left; the money is already sitting there; and he is an officer in default for the same period — frame it as our shared exposure, not my condition.

● The worst outcome, which the unconditioned version produces: I give up ₹44L of coin, it gets spent elsewhere, the arrears stay open, and I carry the liability anyway.

If he refuses: get a written indemnity from Trioangle and from Bowshul personally. It buys a contractual claim if I am pursued. It does not stop a prosecution or a disqualification, and it is only as good as his ability to pay. A consolation, not a solution.

6. ● IF HE FIGHTS TO KEEP ME

The likelier reality: he cannot run Trioangle alone and will use everything he has to hold me. Ajith and Gopi go with him, but they cannot replace sales, marketing, client relationships or technical judgement. He may know that better than I do.

My leverage is the opposite of what I assumed

If he wants me gone	If he cannot manage without me
He holds the better cards. Take the clean swap	I hold the scarce asset, and he knows it
Nil consideration is reasonable	● Nil consideration is a gift to a man who cannot replace me

The tell: "it's okay to lose that money." Anyone who writes off ₹1.93Cr rather than let me leave has told me my presence is worth more than ₹1.93Cr to him. Price accordingly.

● This is the moment I fold — decide before it arrives

Four times I set a position and withdrew it without being refused (bowshul-issues-log #1, #4, #7, #17). The pressure that works on me is not argument. It is being needed.

He will say: "Don't leave me with this." · "After all these years?" · "I can't do this without you." · "Give it one more year."

There is no answer to that in the moment, so the answer must exist beforehand:

PRE-COMMITMENT — written down before walking in, not moved in the room:

- What I will accept for my Trioangle stake, in rupees or netted balances
- The maximum handover, in months, with an end date
- The sentence for this exact moment: "I'm not leaving you with it — I'll hand over properly for as long as it takes. But I do need to separate the ownership."

Nothing final gets agreed in that meeting beyond the shape. That rule exists specifically to protect me from this moment.

His need converts into price and time, not into staying

Staying is not on the table. Everything his need buys has to be taken in the separation itself:

What his need buys	How it shows up
Consideration for my Trioangle shares	Nil stops being the obvious answer
The ₹31L paid or netted without argument	He will not fight it if he needs the handover
Arrears cleared from the coin before completion	Same
A capped handover on my terms	Defined hours, ending on a date — not "available whenever"
A transition fee for the handover year	It has real value to him. Currently unpriced
Favourable seat terms and notice period	The office licence, from strength

⚠ The temptation to resist: "stay one more year as a partner and we'll sort it out." That is the arrangement that produced this file, offered back in warmer words. The answer is the handover, not the partnership.

In the room

1. Do not gloat and do not soften. Being needed is pleasant — and it is the feeling that has cost me four positions.
2. Say the handover sentence. It removes the fear without conceding ownership.
3. Do not reprice on the spot. "Let me think about what that would look like."
4. Offer two doors, both exits: "Either you take Trioangle and I take InnBlockchain, or you buy my Trioangle shares for cash. Either works. Carrying on as we are doesn't."
5. Expect him to reach for a third door — me staying. There isn't one.

7. THE TRANSITION YEAR

Offered: one year in the same office for knowledge transfer; InnBlockchain uses Trioangle's premises for that year, then a seat-based charge.

A full year removes the capability fear almost entirely and costs me little. Four conditions make it safe.

1. 🚫 Resign as director at completion; deliver the year as a consultant.

Staying a year on the board extends every personal exposure by a year — the officer-liability period for PF/ESI/TDS, the IBC look-back window (which does not start until I am off the board), the records position, and disqualification risk. The handover does not require the directorship. Identical help, none of the liability extension.

2. 🚫 Pay a seat charge from month one, at market rate.

Point 3 promises "Trioangle never funds blockchain again." A free year of Trioangle's premises is Trioangle funding InnBlockchain — and he will spot it. The amount is trivial; what it buys is that "clean break" is literally true. Allocate every shared cost from day one — electricity, internet, admin, the AI account.

3. Put it in a written licence. I already have one undocumented inter-company arrangement and it has produced an unenforceable balance, a flattered P&L and a records exposure. Do not create a second.

Term	Why
Rate per seat and what it includes	Stops the subsidy argument
Fixed 12-month term	An end date, not an understanding
Notice period both ways, minimum 3 months	Without it he can move InnBlockchain out on a bad day. I would be a tenant of a company he owns outright
Renewal terms	So year two is not a fresh negotiation from weakness
The deposit stays Trioangle's	It is inside the ₹30L of tangibles I am giving up. I do not get it back and should not ask

4. 🚫 Cap the handover hours. A year in the same office doing a full handover and running InnBlockchain is more load, not less — and the relief this separation is for arrives in late 2027, not on completion. A day a week, or a named list of deliverables. Not "available whenever." An uncapped year of helping out is how a boundary gets set and never defended for the fifth time.

Also settle: who decides what internally during the year; whether I am paid a transition fee; and that the year is consideration — it has real value to him, so do not give it away free and also accept nil for the shares.

8. PERSONAL EXPOSURE — what follows me out

Exposure	Ends on resignation / share transfer?
Personal guarantee on a loan / OD / CC	No — only when the lender releases me in writing
Collateral I pledged — property, FDs, family assets	No
Co-borrower / co-obligor	No
Post-dated or security cheques	No
Statutory dues during my tenure — GST, TDS, PF, ESI, wages	No
Ordinary trade creditors	Yes — company liability
The ₹46.7L balance	Company-to-company — unless I guaranteed it

● The one that can wreck the plan: if I guaranteed Trioangle's borrowings and then exit, the guarantee survives unless the lender releases me — and lenders routinely refuse without substitute security. Bad outcome: Bowshul owns 100% of Trioangle and I still stand behind its debts, with no shares and no control.

→ Release of every guarantee must be a written condition precedent — and the lender controls that, not Bowshul. A third party in this negotiation.

⚠ "I think there are no guarantees" is not good enough. An ₹18L OD without a director's guarantee would be unusual. Read the sanction letter.

If Trioangle later fails and I hold only shares

As a pure shareholder: no liability beyond the share value. But I would be a former director holding shares:

At insolvency	Survives?
Personal guarantees	Yes — insolvency is when guarantees get called
Look-back on director conduct (IBC s.43–51, s.66; Companies Act s.339)	Yes, ~1–2 years before commencement. Resigning before a collapse protects nothing for the prior period
TDS / PF / ESI from my tenure	Yes
The shareholding	Capped — I lose the value

The risk has a clock on it. Once every guarantee is released in writing and the look-back window has passed with me clear of the board, I am insulated. Time plus written releases is what makes a separation safe — not the share transfer.

Non-monetary consequences — the ones that follow me into the next company

Consequence	Effect
Director disqualification (s.164 / s.167)	Bars me from being a director of any company, typically 5 years. Would block my own new company. The most dangerous item here
CIBIL default as guarantor	No home loan, no facility, no working capital for the next venture
Wilful defaulter listing	Closes institutional credit
Cheque dishonour (s.138)	Summons, court appearances, years
TDS / PF / ESI prosecution	Attaches to the responsible officer regardless of who holds shares later
 Fit-and-proper failure — EU licensing	ECSP / MiCA authorisation tests management integrity. Can make me unlicensable in the exact business I am leaving to build
Local reputation	Madurai / TN networks are small. This travels

"The shares are worth nothing anyway" is the wrong frame. Guarantees, officer liability and disqualification attach to me, not to the shareholding. A company left to collapse behind me can disqualify me from running the thing I left to run.

9. DO NOT DIVERT WORK OR REVENUE BEFORE COMPLETION

He owns 50% of InnBlockchain today. Until a transfer completes he is legally entitled to half of whatever it becomes, including revenue earned from now on.

"He doesn't deserve it" is not the operative test — entitlement comes from a share register, not from conduct. Diverting work, revenue or opportunities away from InnBlockchain to avoid sharing is the corporate-opportunity and oppression exposure, and it converts a weak claim of his into a strong one. It is the one thing that could cost me InnBlockchain entirely, and it destroys the negotiating position.

The way to stop sharing is to finish the deal, not to withhold.

⚠ And the timing tension to put to counsel explicitly: the stronger my conviction that InnBlockchain will out-earn Trioangle, the more urgent completing the swap becomes — every good quarter raises the value of his 50%. But that runs straight into the records position, which cannot be rushed.

10. SEQUENCING

Order	Step
1	Independent advocate — tax / corporate counsel — on the parallel-records position. Not the incumbent CA (group-financials §1d): he may have maintained the records, he is the companies' CA not mine, and a CA carries no legal privilege in India. Counsel engages an independent CA
2	Decide the remediation plan before anything is said to Bowshul — raising it without a plan invites a reaction neither of us can control, and he is exposed too
3	Raise it with Bowshul as joint remediation. Both signed; cheaper together. The strongest cooperative argument available
4	Then the separation — valuations, netting, guarantee releases, arrears cleared from the coin

11. BEFORE ANY CONVERSATION

- ☐ ● Counsel on the parallel-records position — independent advocate, not the incumbent CA
- ☐ ● Personal-guarantee / collateral / statutory-arrears list — every guarantee, pledge, co-obligation and arrear, per company, per person, with lender and amount. Does not exist yet
- ☐ ● Read the OD sanction letter — does the ₹18L carry a personal guarantee?
- ☐ ● Was TDS deducted from salaries and not deposited?
- ☐ Salary payable and PF/ESI arrears as figures, per company
- ☐ ● A position on the ₹1.46Cr QoreUps write-off — it moves Trioangle's net assets and therefore the price of my 50%
- ☐ ● What happens to QoreUps — wind up, he takes it, or I do
- ☐ ● Coin valuation date and reference price, fixed in writing — ₹88L of a volatile asset can move 30–40% inside a negotiation window
- ☐ ● My pre-commitment (§6): the number I will accept, the maximum handover, and the sentence for the moment he says he can't do it without me
- ☐ InnBlockchain's funding plan without Trioangle — the first thing he will ask
- ☐ Clients, IP, codebase, brand, domains — who keeps what
- ☐ The team — who goes where; Gopi; my wife's position
- ☐ What the team, clients and market get told — and when, and by whom. A separation neither of us has explained will be explained by whoever speaks first
- ☐ Non-compete / non-solicit both ways
- ☐ Transition year terms — consultant not director, seat charge from month one, written licence, 3-month notice, capped hours, transition fee
- ☐ My personal runway — no Trioangle income, and what InnBlockchain pays me from month one. This decides how long I can hold out, so it is my leverage. And it answers whether "I won't pay" is a position or a constraint
- ☐ Does Bowshul have a matching unpaid-salary accrual? (group-financials §6.7)
- ☐ ● A target date for each step. There is no timeline yet — and an open-ended process is the thing I have been criticised for twice

12. THE FOUR THINGS TO HOLD ONTO

1. It's a decision, not a case. Never justify — every reason I give becomes something he can offer to solve.

2. Work out in the first ten minutes which conversation this is — does he want me gone, or does he need me to stay? Point 3 convinces the first. The handover offer answers the second. Using the wrong one loses the room.
3. ● If he needs me, I hold the scarce asset — and nil consideration stops being reasonable.
Do not reprice in the room.
4. Leaving with no agreement is fine. "Let me think" is a success — and nothing final gets agreed in that room.

Three things that cannot be engineered away:

- He will work out it is personal. I control whether it is said, not whether it is understood. A separation with no stated reason will feel like a rejection, because it is one. That is the price of not itemising, and it is cheaper than the alternative.
- I want him to understand what he did. He will not, and no sentence can make him. Trying is what turns a separation into a war. The exit and the acknowledgement are not both available.
- Much of what I want is to be recognised as the senior partner. No deal delivers that. Decide terms on numbers; take the recognition question somewhere else.

The grievances justify leaving. They do not price the deal.

Counsel first, then remediation, then valuations — then the conversation.
